

MR1957-533

-- Abstract

An auxiliary device for editing documents comprises a computer peripheral and a modular key set with document editing functions. The modular key set is arranged on the computer peripheral and connected to an I/O bus of the single-chip microprocessor. Therefore, a user can directly use the modular key set to edit documents without invoking chording key combinations or heavy use of the mouse.--